Free Video to MP3 Converter developed by DVDVideoSoftware is music converter freeware I personally like very much. As it relates to toolbar/home page hijack in some way (this only happens when downloading from some download sites) and prompts upgrade (paid) window at times, it is not accepted by some people regardless of its merits. On the contrary, it is a powerful video to MP3 converter with multi audio formats/codecs supported. In addition to MP3, videos can be converted to AAC, OGG, WAV, WMA, APE, M4A, M4R, FLAC for both listening on iPod, iPhone or being used for other purposes. Different output quality levels are provided depending on the audio format. For example, when setting the audio output as MP3, users can choose from 32 Kbits to 320 Kbits, together with several types of VBR coding.

After adding files, setting "Save to" destination folder and output format & quality, you can click the "Convert" button to convert video to MP3. Converted audio files will be opened with iTunes by default. If you want to open the MP3 file with another player program, head to "Options..." to cancel the association. By customizing the "Theme" field, you can change the converter interface as the screenshot above.

Contrary to the lightweight experience delivered by Polaris MP3 converter, Freemake Video Converter is more much larger in size and far stronger in features. In stead of a pure video 2 MP3 converters, it's actually an all-in-one music & video converter package, which can be used to convert video to MP3 of course.

Click the Video-plus button on the top to add your video files, then choose "to MP3" at the bottom to complete the settings and convert to MP3 free. As part of the all-in-one functions, it occupies a lot of storage and crashes at times.
